

NHANES

The National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (NHANES), sponsored by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, collects information about the health and nutritional status of people living in the United States. Our data collection team, comprising interviewers, medical professionals, and data collection managers, conducts in-person interviews in households, medical examinations in our state-of-the-art mobile examination centers and telephone dietary interviews. Most NHANES positions are full time and involve continuous travel across the U.S. annually.
